relationship, but we have to remember that whatever is pleasing to us will probably be pleasing to our spouse. If your partner likes you watching sports or playing golf, for example, don't expect that they don't like you to do those things. You might be surprised that they like the same kind of activity. It may be useful to remember that your spouse was raised by their parents before they married, just as you were. If you were raised by a single parent, you probably have the benefit of being aware of different lifestyles, and of how they affect your father's role in your sex life. There's nothing wrong with your dad watching football on Sunday night, but if he's in bed before midnight, expect that he's going to be missing some sleep on Monday morning. You may think that he won't mind, but you are probably wrong. A man needs to feel like he has a certain amount of energy, and he's going to need that energy. If you're the kind of guy who watches football with your dad, you'll find it difficult to go to bed early because you're too wound up. He wants to have that extra little bit of energy to enjoy what he's doing, and he wants to share that with you. You're going to find that he'll enjoy watching football with you. He'll enjoy watching it with other people too, and he'll enjoy having company because it's fun to laugh, to watch the game, and to share something with someone else.

There's nothing more relaxing than sitting around a fire in the cold and watching a ball game together. If your dad has trouble getting up early on the weekends, try to get him to go out for a morning walk
