Suffice to say that most of my number receiving devices have been software based, be they Symbian, Android, Windows Mobile, BlackBerry or iOS devices. In the UK, China Mobile is the provider with the largest market share, which I can't see changing in the next few years. It seems likely that the mobile (and consequently the radio) base for the UK will increasingly be found in the suburbs, where at least the base stations are less likely to be the property of a local city council. The one place where it's doubtful that the numbers of SIMS will continue to decline is the middle east, where many people will have yet to invest in the technology needed to use smartphone apps. That aside, I
