The purpose of this review was to examine the risk factors for superficial phlebitis (SP) associated with the long-acting fentanyl buccal system (FBS) to provide insight into preventing SP. A systematic review and meta-analysis of the available literature in this area. The search was performed on MEDLINE, EMBASE, the Cochrane Central Register of Controlled Trials, ClinicalTrials.gov, the World Health Organization International Clinical Trials Registry, and the metaRegister of Controlled Trials from the Cochrane Library. The search was completed on May 29, 2018. Randomized controlled trials, controlled clinical trials, and comparative studies were reviewed. A meta-analysis was performed with the data collected. The primary outcome was the risk of SP associated with long-acting FBS compared with other medications. Ten studies were included in this meta-analysis. The pooled odds ratio (OR) for the risk of SP associated with long-acting FBS was 2.39 (95% confidence interval, 1.79-3.18). For fentanyl alone, the pooled OR was 3.36 (95% confidence interval, 1.88-6.03). The risk of SP was significantly higher in the long-acting FBS group compared with the controls (OR, 2.39; 95% confidence interval, 1.79-3.18). Subgroup analysis showed that a pain duration of ≥12 months and the use of transdermal fentanyl increased the risk of SP
