History Photoshop was created by three employees at Pixel Design. Initially, a program called Photomaster was used to create vector artwork and manipulate raster images for Powerpoint slides. Adobe's CorelDraw was created by the same team and integrated into the program. Photoshop 1.0 was released on May 2, 1990. In order to generate compatible file formats (PCL, GIF, TIFF, JPEG, PostScript, and PDF) for Powerpoint, CorelDraw, and other applications, Adobe released PS to run under DOS, Windows for Workgroups, and Windows 3.1. Early versions only supported two-color images. Photoshop 1.1 was released on October 20, 1991. Adobe eliminated the CorelDraw layer module; now, Photoshop was designed for professional use, with layers, masks, selections, and much more. In addition, users could now use Photoshop in more ways through importing other software such as Flash, QuarkXPress, Pagemaker, and more. It has improved greatly since version 0.2, and has many features that allow it to compete with many commercial programs. How to use Photoshop Photoshop has made it much easier to manipulate images using a layered structure. With Photoshop, layers let you add or subtract various parts of your image. Layer masks let you change the opacity of an area of a layer without changing the actual picture underneath it. Creating a new document In Photoshop, creating a new document is very simple. Just right-click on the image you wish to work with, and select "New." In the window that appears, select a 100% white or 100% black image. Photoshop lets you drag a background image around the document to create space. You'll see a gray background in the top left corner of the window as well as a "paper" or page size option in the top right corner. You can change the size and shape of your document at this time. You can also choose a "Content Aware" selection tool from the top toolbar to automatically

MARIETTA — Operation Sacred Trust, a joint U.S. Army and special operations veteran program designed to help develop future military cyber soldiers, finished its fourth round of training at the Georgia National Guard's MTS West Valley Training Center. It's the first time that the program has been based in Georgia, said Maj. Gen. Ricky J. Turner, deputy commander for the Georgia National Guard's 1st Brigade Combat Team. "This will continue the program so it's a good venue to get that next-generation cyber soldier out of Georgia," Turner said during the nearly five-day training. Operation Sacred Trust, started in 2011, places cyber specialists with organizations serving in the Army and with the military's Special Operations Command. The training is done in a three-week rotational process. The first cycle is for newly assigned soldiers to get in a routine and to start the process of becoming a cyber professional. The second cycle is for experienced soldiers who want to bring better technology skills to the Army and U.S. Special Operations Command. The third cycle is for senior noncommissioned officers, Turner said. The program's goal is to provide advanced cyber instruction in the Army and with various military partners, including with the coalition Special Operations Command, he said. "To perform that mission, you need cyber guys," Turner said. "And the Army needs the Army to be efficient, effective and resilient. To
