A: It doesn't matter what the source is as long as the problem is fixed. Just make sure you don't use the one from 2012. Checks for stack overflows A new stack overflow protection mechanism has been added, which checks for more kinds of stack overflows. However, it must be enabled explicitly using the "-stack-check-align" argument. There is a good chance you may run into this problem every once in awhile when you are working with huge arrays as the fix for this bug has some memory overhead which is reflected as poor speed. The size of a fixed array which is allocated on the stack must be a whole number, namely, a multiple of 64. However, if you start the visual studio as administrator and run the program from that, it should be fine. A: The answer depends on the version of Visual Studio you're using. I just tested it with the Visual Studio Professional 2015 Update 3. Since I am on Windows 10, I had to run my application as an Administrator. However, if you're using Visual Studio 2013, or any other version of Visual Studio which requires you to use an Administrator account, you'll still have to find the setting yourself. Open Visual Studio, Tools | Options..., then in the left pane, choose Projects and Solutions. In the right pane, set the Startup Project to "Always use default settings" There you go, now you can build and run your application as a normal user! However, my research showed it is not possible to get a local CSV file with the open source Cv2 library. There are many other examples explaining how to use the Python libraries scikit-learn or OpenCV but none showing how to export a local CSV file directly. Has anybody experienced this problem before or knows a solution to this problem? A: Did you try this one? with open("filename.csv", "w", newline="") as csv_file: writer = csv.writer(csv_file) for index, txt in enumerate(file): writer.writerow((txt, str(index))) # ^^^^with this line you save the index number Which save the data in the row number. Edit: In Python 3.4, Python created a new data type called Mapping, which allows us to change the name of the index and the corresponding data. with open("filename.csv", "w", newline="") as csv_file: writer = csv.writer(csv_file) for txt, index in enumerate(file): writer.writerow((txt, list(str(index)))) Also, you can use enumerate instead of index directly. Note: This is just an example. The python import can be improved, as well as the code. the sense of deja vu, but on the other hand, I must admit, it's kinda nice to have something around that I'm a bit familiar with. Given how many fans React Game Studio have, they must have had a very easy time running a Kickstarter. The Kickstarters just flew 6d1f23a050
