The United States has withdrawn its ambassador to Cameroon and declared its ambassador and the American charge d'affaires "incapable of serving" in the African country as a result of "irreconcilable differences."

Ambassador Robert Jackson announced the move in a statement Friday. He said the State Department's decision was based on "irreconcilable differences" between the U.S. and the Cameroonian government over the latter's measures against members of the Congress of Cameroon (CoC), an opposition group. "The United States government and the American people strongly support the aspirations of the Congress of Cameroon, and they expect the government of Cameroon to implement constitutional and legal reforms, and to allow free and fair elections and a transition to democracy and the rule of law in Cameroon," said Jackson. "The United States government takes its lead from the wishes of the American people and the Government of Cameroon's free and fair elections process in 2015, and reaffirms its determination to support the peaceful transition to a democratic, free, and prosperous Cameroon," he added. The State Department's statement came three days after a vote by the U.S. Congress in support of Cameroonian members of the Congress of Cameroon. Some members of the executive and legislative branches of the government in Cameroon voted against the resolution, which affirms that those in the country are still engaged in an “unconstitutional and unconstitutional political repression” and those responsible should be punished, warned the U.S. Congress

As the Jewish New Year, Rosh Hashanah, approaches, the United States and much of the world is grappling with the coronavirus pandemic. Although the vast majority of coronavirus cases are mild or moderate, particularly in China, some are more serious. In most cases, the virus (officially named 2019-nCoV) eventually appears to resolve itself. But for some, particularly elderly and immuno-compromised, the virus appears to progress rapidly to the point of no return. For some in the United States, the virus has already crossed the threshold, and the situation on the ground is bleak. As a Jew and Zionist, I am both relieved and saddened by this news. Relieved, because it means that there will be no new Jew-hatred at a time when Jews around the world need unity and solidarity more than ever. Sad, because I am afraid that we will meet our fate, along with many other Jews, at the hands of a resurgent anti-Semitism. The A.C.L.U. recently reported on a study conducted by the Anti-Defamation League about anti-Semitic incidents throughout the country. It found that anti-Semitic incidents are at an all-time high since the 1990s. A total of 300 anti-Semitic incidents
