Flip Mouse Wheel [Updated-2022]

Displays a panel on top of the Window with shortcuts to the installed mouse drivers. Can reverse both vertical and horizontal scrolling direction Can be used to tweak the mouse wheel scrolling behavior, in order to switch the default scrolling direction This is a known software flaw, that allows hackers to remotely take control over Windows 7 computers, using a single email. The flaw resides in the way Windows validates the email headers, which leaves the door open to a trick that may turn out to be very useful. Known flaw in Windows 7 and older If you have been following our monthly Internet security news coverage, you know that the Blaster worm continues to have a heavy impact on the Windows platform. Blaster is a worm that first appeared in 2011 and has been updated continuously since its first version. The latest version, known as WannaCry, first affected computers running Windows XP and older, and affected even Windows 8, Windows Server 2012 and Server 2016. Several affected users reported, for example, that their computers froze, rebooting into a system repair menu, for no reason. The worm infected computers on the Microsoft network, and mainly the computers belonging to the NHS, the United Kingdom's National Health Service. This health service is a national health service, offering free healthcare to citizens, and its IT infrastructure was partially affected by the worm. It is believed that the virus also affected computers belonging to the law enforcement agencies in the country. The bad news is that the Blaster worm has been upgraded to be much more serious than the first versions, as has been previously reported, with the new version of the worm, dubbed WannaCry, being the most dangerous threat. Another big flaw: how hackers can use the flawed email validation routine to take control over computers, which allows a hacker to remotely take control over a Windows 7 computer. How the hackers can make it worse The vulnerability resides in the way Windows validates the email headers that are sent to the computers. This email validation routine allows a hacker to send email spoofs to a computer, and also be sure that the malicious emails, sent by the hacker, won't be removed from the system, making the malware very difficult to identify. Even though Microsoft has patched this flaw in the years, hackers have already been using it for some time in order to remotely infect people's computers. The email spoof has an additional advantage, as it can be disguised as a good email, to trick the user

You may be surprised to realize how productive you are when resorting to your innate skills, and not your acquired capabilities. Still, people may have different views on instinctive behavior, and what one sees as natural, another could consider atypical. To get a better idea of what such a situation implies, you can think of the mouse scrolling direction. You may have noticed that, in Windows, by default, your mouse wheel and the web page you are scrolling up or down move in opposite directions. So in order to scroll down, you actually need to flick up on your mouse. Changes the behavior of your mouse wheel Fortunately, there is a software utility that can prove of great help if you don't find this behavior natural. It is dubbed Flip Mouse Wheel, and as said, it provides you with full control of the scrolling direction. You simply need to double-click its executable in order to be prompted with a window showing all the devices you want to affect. Clicking the “
