I understand that they are trying to offer a better solution, but I do not like the way they handle things. Here is my experience. I had a software box that was damaged, my computer was not up to the task to replace it or get it repaired, and I called Glo, they agreed to come out and look at it. They determined that the computer would not handle the new version, and would not work with the last one. They quoted me a price, and I agreed to pay for it. They put in a new one for me, took out my old box, and left a "returned" box with everything in it. Then I returned to do the dance that I do with any company that refunds money that I gave them. When I got the back, the entire box was empty, including the "returned" box. I then call the company and explain to them about the box. They tell me that they had to put it in the "returned" box, because a company representative could not get into the box to take it out. They also tell me that they have not received it back, so how can they replace it. The representative told me that they could not work that. The representative then tells me that she can contact the shipping company that sent it to them and have them contact me. Two days pass, the shipping company calls, they told me that they had no record of them having sent it to them. So they sent me another one. But this one does not work either. So I had 2 boxes. One is a "returned" box, and no record that it was ever in their company. They also refused to replace the damaged box, so had I waited I would e79caf774b
