Q: Rails - updating users (updating only email) I have a user model with email as one of the fields.

I'd like to get all of the emails from that model and make a JSON payload where I'd replace the email field with the new email. Is there any reason this wouldn't work? Thank you! A: What is your actual use case? Just guessing: # app/controllers/application_controller.rb def handle_user_update(user) user.email = @email @email = email_normalized_by_yaml(user.email, @email) # [...] end def email_normalized_by_yaml(email, default_email) valid_email = email_valid_by_yaml(email) if valid_email YAML.load(ERB.new(File.read("/path/to/yaml")).result)

["default"] = email end end If you just need to replace the content of the email field and keep the record in the database, you could simply do: # app/controllers/application_controller.rb def handle_user_update(user) user.email = @email user.save # [...] end Contamination and eutrophication due to loading of sewage waste water in a small shallow temperate river. A cell type that is configured by one or more logic gates are mounted within a semiconductor integrated circuit. Such a cell type is classified into an input type and an output type. FIG. 1 is a view showing a first example of an input type cell type which is inputted with a power supply voltage VDD and a ground voltage GND, respectively. This cell type has two inputs (for example, signals IN1 and IN2). FIG. 2 is a view showing a second example of an input type cell type which is inputted with a power supply voltage VDD and a ground voltage GND, respectively. This cell type has four inputs (for example, signals IN1, IN2, IN3, and IN4). This type is widely used as an input type cell type. The input type cell is not arranged in the layout of the semiconductor integrated circuit when a semiconductor integrated circuit layout (design) is made. Therefore, when the semiconductor integrated circuit is fabricated, a cell that is not the input type may be arranged in the layout. In order to avoid this, the layout of the cell type (input type cell) is arranged in the layout of the semiconductor integrated circuit as the input type. As a result of this, the input type cell is arranged in the layout, as shown in FIG. 3. However, the following occurs. The input type cell has two terminals: an input terminal (for example, node N1), and an output terminal (for example, node N2). Thus, the input terminal and the output terminal are formed asymmetrically with each other. Therefore, the above-described design leads to an asymmetrical arrangement, and accordingly the level (level height of the node) thereof is asymmetrical. This is a problem. Here, a first conventional technique for solving the above-described problem is disclosed in the following Document 1. FIG. 4 is a plan view showing a second example of an input type cell type which is inputted with a power supply voltage VDD and a ground voltage GND, respectively.
