Sony Digital Camera FH-930 Zoom, Hand-Held Digital Camera with.Sunday, October 21, 2010 Monday, November 11, 2010 Two years ago I came up with the idea to create an additional training day at the Summit, just for small group leaders. I created a day of learning based on Jim Collins's work in this area. I knew from observing my colleagues that the experience of small group leaders could be difficult. I also heard reports from other conference leaders that they had challenges when working with their small groups. So, I thought it might be helpful to extend the small group training day specifically to help small group leaders address their struggles. I was surprised, as I worked with the team, to find that so many leaders had problems developing their groups. They said, for example, "my small groups are not as good as they could be." Or, "I'm not sure how to train my groups." I asked them if they wanted help and they were clear that they did. So, it was my privilege to lead the effort to create this additional small group training day.

Working with a team of colleagues in our department, we created the small group training day. We held it as a mini-Summit two years ago and then, in 2010, decided to offer it on its own. The small group training day is about helping small group leaders understand what we are looking for in them and then helping them see clearly how to provide that. In the training day, we focus on four things: Developing a strong philosophy in the group
