

Myths are every bit as true. 2011
winner of the ESPY, the best soccer player in the world, and he's finally going to be bringing soccer to Tennessee. Time to get excited. Hope Solo was arrested early Wednesday morning for an alleged alcohol-related domestic abuse. According to what the Seattle Times reports, the Seattle-based goalkeeper was in Eugene to play for the University of Oregon, and had been involved in an incident in a hotel room at Eugene's West Eugene Hotel on Tuesday night, where police say that she was "slapping and hitting" her husband Matt. Reports are that the domestic abuse continued into the early hours of Wednesday morning, and there were two bottles of whiskey in the room, along with Solo's wallet and purse, which according to police, was missing some credit cards, and also several $10 bills. According to NBC Sports' Paul Kennedy, Solo was in Eugene for a 5pm doubleheader between the Oregon Ducks and Oregon State Beavers on Tuesday, and she missed the second match. Solo, who has won the ESPY trophy four times for "Best Female Athlete," released a statement on her Facebook page at approximately 5:30 on Wednesday morning, in which she also apologized to her "friends, family, coaches, and teammates." Tough sport. Tougher
