Roblox allows players to create and play games on Roblox.com. Players use Robux, Roblox's virtual currency, to buy in-game items, such as weapons, armor, homes, and other props. Gamers can then customize and share their creations in the Roblox Workshop or download them to their computers or mobile devices to play offline. Games are represented as fictional universes containing characters who have a life and are affected by decisions the players make. Roblox operates on a freemium business model, which means that players may use in-game currency to buy virtual items, such as clothing, weapons, and accessories, for use within the game. However, they are not required to purchase such items to progress and are free to ignore or disable this feature if they choose. Robux may also be spent for virtual goods, subscriptions, Roblox Studio credits, premium currency, and for game developer events. Robux may be purchased in the game using real-world money by some users, but most Roblox users use Robux as the primary form of payment for content on the website and as a currency to facilitate in-game purchases in the game. Robux are in-game items used to buy various in-game virtual items and services in the game. The core of Roblox is the developers' site, Roblox.com. Roblox was originally created in January of 2004. Roblox allows users to create and play games in their own virtual world and to meet other people online. It was developed by David Baszucki and Erik Cassel, who were roommates at the time. They began working on it while studying at the University of Waterloo. Roblox Model: Roblox is free to play, with in-game purchases available through Robux, the game's currency. Roblox's freemium model relies on virtual currency as a primary method of purchasing in-game items. According to Baszucki and Cassel, Roblox's business model is "similar to a video game publisher charging a subscription to play the game in the player's own private browser window," and players "opt in by purchasing a subscription and downloading the game to their computers or mobile devices." Currently, the primary payment method for Roblox is Robux. Gameplay: To create games, users have a "Roblox Studio" development environment. The website or mobile app contains a number of
