There has been a lot of discussion over the past few days about how much stamina a presidential candidate would need to carry out the responsibilities of the presidency. As noted earlier, Trump mentioned Hillary's stamina when he was asked about his running mate being a role model for women. "I just don't want to be the only guy running. I don't know that Pence would make a very good president," Trump said. "I want to bring Mike, I think Mike's a wonderful vice president. I think he's a great vice president and a terrific human being. I think he's a terrific person. But I just don't know that I'm going to make a good president with him. I'm not sure." But he added later, "Look, people that are saying I won't be a strong president, that I won't be a good president, they want the vote to be rigged. They're ashamed of what our country's all about. They're ashamed of the people of our country. And they've got to get out there and vote." Trump has also criticized Clinton over her physical fitness. "She's not looking so good these days," he said in a tweet earlier this week. These comments were brought up again during a tele-town hall Sunday evening, when Trump was asked what qualities his vice presidential nominee would need to have. "Well, first of all, I'm not going to talk about, at least I'm not going to bring it up," Trump told host Hugh Hewitt. "But Hillary Clinton's health is a disaster. If Hillary Clinton were to be given a shot of penicillin right now, I don't know what the results would be. When you talk about Hillary, it's got to be something that is really very bad. I just don't
